

CARNEGIE ADDS TO GIFT FOR CITY'S BOOK-LOVERS

Laird of Skibo Pledges $350,000 to Establish Branch Libraries in All Parts of the District.

Twelve Subsidiary Centers of Distribution Become Possible When Congress Accepts Conditions.

Delighted with the work of the building commission, impressed by the evidence of appreciation of his gift, and realizing the need of branch libraries in the District of Columbia, Andrew Carnegie announced last night to the trustees of the Washington Public Library his intention to give the District $350,000 additional.

The announcement was a surprise to them, and the news was soon spread among the friends of the new library trustees. Everywhere it was hailed with joy, for the additional money will serve to carry out a plan long ago formulated by the library trustees, and will more closely meet the views of the Steel King. At once, the question of the location of the branches arose, and this morning there was bustling among the suburbs to capture the prizes.

Under Original Conditions. In announcing his additional gift, Mr. Carnegie said: "Since I made the original gift to Washington for a public library I have kept in mind that branch libraries should be erected here in remote parts of the city, and I have said to Mr. Warner and others that I will give $350,000 to be used for these branches upon condition that sites be provided and that Congress maintain the buildings just as it is to maintain the central building."

Will Cover District. The fund established yesterday by the Laird of Skibo will be so divided by the trustees as to distribute the branch buildings according to the population. Suitable branches can be erected at a cost of $50,000, and this will permit the construction of seven. If the cost is limited to $30,000 or less, a dozen branches can be established and the entire population of the District favored with these libraries. The board will take up the matter of equitable distribution at an early meeting.

While inspecting the library last night, Mr. Carnegie said: "I am more than pleased with the building. The commission has erected one of the handsomest libraries in the country and a number of those now under construction are modeled after this one. The work of construction is thorough and endurable and the arrangement is all that could be desired. I intended to mention the excellent work of Capt. Bernard Green in my speech and had in mind before the dedication to praise the architect, but forgot both."

Branches Much Needed. "The people of the District of Columbia are a book-loving people and I want to do all I can to help them in their pleasures. Because of so many bright, intelligent Government employees, the demand for books is large. Washington is growing rapidly and is getting to be quite a winter resort. On account of the increasing population, the need of a branch library system was impressed upon me and so I made my additional offer."

B. H. Warner was perhaps the happiest man in the city this morning, for the first announcement of Mr. Carnegie's additional gift was made to him last night as he was walking through the library building with the founder and his wife. Mrs. Carnegie was deeply impressed with the exercises yesterday and pleased with the many kindly things said to her distinguished husband by the representatives of the different branches of the Government.

While the President spoke, Mrs. Carnegie sat directly in front of him and as words of praise were given Mr. Carnegie, blushes of pride passed across her face. She seemed much interested in that part of the President's address in which he referred to men helping themselves instead of being helped, and applauded the sentiment warmly.

The President's Speech. The President spoke extemporaneously, but his address was marked by its epigrammatic statements. He said, in part: "Mr. Macfarland, Mr. Carnegie, gentlemen and ladies, I count myself fortunate in being able to come here today, not only for my own private, individual sake, but as in some sort representing the people of our country, to express my profound appreciation of what is emphatically the gift of wisdom."

"A gift of the utmost possible benefit to all the people of the country, from you, Mr. Carnegie. [Applause.]

"It seems to me that the man has a right to call himself thrice blessed who has in him the combined power and purpose to use his wealth for the benefit of all the people at large in a way that can do them real benefit, and in no way can more benefit be done than through the gift of libraries such as this."

"A free library, where each man, each woman, has the chance to get for himself or herself the training that he has the character to desire and to acquire. Now, of course, our common school system lies at the foundation of our educational system, but it is the foundation only. The men who are to stand pre-eminent as the representatives of the culture of the community must educate themselves. [Applause.]

Self-Educational Work. "And the work done by this library is helpful, because it represents one side of the way in which all this self-educational work in a community must be done."

"Mr. Carnegie, neither you nor any one else can make a man wise or cultivate him. All you can do is to give him a chance to make himself, to add to his own wisdom or his own cultivation, and that is all you can do in any kind of genuine philanthropic work. The only philanthropic work is work that helps a man to help himself. This is true in every way, socially and sociologically. The man who will submit or demand to be carried is not worth carrying."

(To this Mr. Carnegie ejaculated, "Hear! Hear!")

Equalizing Opportunities. "Every man of us needs help, needs more and more to be given the chance to show forth in himself the stuff that is in him, and this kind of free library is doing in the world of cultivation, the world of civilization, what it should or may do for the great world of political and social development; that is, it is, as far as may be, equalizing the opportunities and then leaving the men themselves to show how able they are to take advantage of those opportunities. [Applause.]

"In other words, this is the kind of gift that strikes the happy middle course to show public spirit on the one hand and to help those to take advantage of it on the other hand."

Best Sort of Gift. "To quote an expression that I am fond of, this sort of gift is equally far from two prime vices of our civilization, hardness of heart, and softness of head. [Applause.]

"I am not here to make a speech, and, unfortunately, have to leave at once, as the President has several duties to attend to."

"I have come because I feel that the movement for securing better facilities for self-training, better facilities for education in its widest and broadest and deepest sense is one of such prime importance that the President of the United States could nowhere more properly come than to this building, Mr. Carnegie, at this time, to thank you for the gift that you have given to the people of the National Capital."

Library Opens Monday.

Librarian Flint announced last night the library will not be open for the giving out of books until Monday. Most of the books are now in place, but a little more time is required to place the library in perfect condition for the work, and he has deemed it advisable to do so now.

Mr. and Mrs. Carnegie left this afternoon for New York. While in the city he saw few persons on account of his physical condition, and remained close to his hotel. He said before he left that he hoped to visit Washington again soon and have an opportunity of seeing more of his friends living at the Capital.

CONDUCTED FIRST WAGON TRAIN TO SAN FRANCISCO

Captain Schell Dies in Providence Hospital.

The man who took the first wagon train across the plains from St. Joseph, Mo., to San Francisco, died last night in Providence Hospital.

Capt. Francis Marion Schell, born in Frederick county, Maryland, in 1827, had a varied and picturesque experience. When fourteen years old he removed to Indiana. He was there at the outbreak of the Mexican war, in which he enlisted, leaving a bride behind. He conducted himself with gallantry at Chalupetec, and came out of the war with a fine record.

This was the time the gold fever struck the country. Captain Schell, hardened by his campaigning experiences, and eminently fitted by nature for such a hazardous undertaking, conceived the project of an overland trip to California. To him, therefore, was intrusted the conduct of a wagon train across the then pathless wilderness, and to him attaches the credit of establishing the overland route, thereafter used by the Western pilgrims.

When California was reached Captain Schell prospected for gold, but with indifferent success. He remained in California, however, for twenty-five years.

Since coming to Washington twenty years ago, Captain Schell has held a number of important positions, including assistant doorkeeper of the House of Representatives and lieutenant of Capitol police. Until nine days before his death he had been for some time a watchman in the War Department, and was on duty when taken ill of Bright's disease. He was removed from his home, at 1735 F Street, to Providence Hospital.

It was ordered by vote that the regular meetings of the league be held on the first Wednesday evening of each month. RETAIL DEALERS WILL KEEP BEEF PRICES UP

Live Stock Plentiful and Supply Normal.

Washington, in common with other cities throughout the East, according to retail beef men, is forced to pay unnecessarily high prices for meat, in pursuance of a comprehensive plan of wholesale producers to earn large profits by squeezing the consumer.

There was a slight drop in the retail prices of meats about six weeks ago, but since then they have returned to the high scale, though, according to the best information obtainable from the West, the supply of beef cattle and of all live stock is normal, and no reason exists for the continued advanced retail prices.

That a well defined plan exists among the large Western shippers to keep up this artificial price is evident from a statement made yesterday by Col. J. H. Brigham, Assistant Secretary of the Agriculture. Colonel Brigham, in reviewing the condition of the market, goes so far as to call upon the public to rise in protest against what is designated as extortion.

"There is no reason why the consumer should be required to pay an exorbitant price for beef now," said Colonel Brigham, "in view of the fact that the price of cattle is reduced to its normal rate. The people have but one redress, and that is to make a fuss about the price of beef and organize among themselves to procure it direct from the producers of cattle."

"I am not prepared to say whether the wholesale dealer or the retail dealer is responsible for the high price of meat to the consumer. This I do know, that the raisers of cattle are not getting more than the normal price for their beef. It, therefore, stands to reason that the trouble lies between the wholesaler and the retailers. I am a raiser of cattle myself, and my men who look after my stock have written me that the market is so well stocked now that we are selling our beef at $2.50 a hundred pounds on the foot and $5 for the side meat. That is about the price we received for our cattle prior to the beef famine last June, when prices jumped skyward."

Retailers interviewed by a Times reporter today said they could not understand what kept the prices up.

"We are selling porterhouse steak at 30 cents a pound," said one firm. "For sirloin we get from 22 to 25 cents; round, 14 cents; prime roasts, 18 to 20 cents. The prices of everything are on practically the basis of a year ago, although the prices of cattle have declined 10 per cent."

UNION LABOR SUPPORTS THE EIGHT-HOUR BILL
Congressmen Deluged With Letters Requesting Them to Favor Its Passage.

A concerted movement has apparently been begun throughout the country by the union labor organizations to secure the passage of the eight-hour labor bill, now before the Senate.

Members of the upper house have been deluged for the past week with telegrams, letters, copies of resolutions, and requests of every description from local unions and individuals urging them to vote for the bill.

While the measure, as amended by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor is not altogether satisfactory to the labor organizations, particularly the American Federation, yet it is considered an entering wedge for future legislation of the same nature. Hence the requests for the bill's passage.

A Timely Suggestion. This is the season of the year when the prudent and careful housewife replenishes her supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is certain to be needed before the winter is over, and results are much more prompt and satisfactory when it is kept at hand and given as soon as the cold is contracted and before it has become settled in the system. In almost every instance a severe cold may be warded off by taking this remedy freely as soon as the first indication of the cold appears. There is no danger in giving it to children for it contains no harmful substance. It is pleasant to take—both adults and children like it. Buy it and you will get the best. It always cures. For sale by Henry Evans, wholesaler, and all druggists.

JERSEYITES AFTER ORATORS. A delegation of members of the Board of Trade of Newark, N. The crowning joy of womanhood is motherhood and the crowning joy of motherhood is to have healthy children. But there can be no joy in motherhood without health, and without health for the mother there can be no health for the child.

It is of vital importance for women to know that the health of mother and child is in general entirely within woman's control. The thousands of women who have used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, have testified that it made them healthy and happy in the days of waiting, made the baby's advent practically painless, and gave them health to give their children.

Mrs. W. J. Kidder, of Hill Dale Farm (Rhineburg Center), Rhineburg, N. Y., writes: "During the past year I found myself expecting maternity, and in rapidly failing health. I suffered dreadfully from bloating and urinary difficulty. I was growing perceptibly weaker each day and suffered much sharp pain at times. I felt that something must be done. I sought your advice and received a prompt reply. I took twelve bottles of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and also followed your instructions. I began to improve immediately, my health became excellent, and I could do my own work (we live on a good sized farm). I walked and rode all I could, and enjoyed it. I had a short, easy confinement and had a healthy baby boy."
